Reader's Theatre is a group of children that read a play in front of the class. You don't wear any costumes or wigs. You can use tables and chairs as props. We had to practice a lot.

Hayden

I enjoyed working with other people and performing Reader's Theatre. Getting to know my character and trying to act the way I thought she would act was a challenge. We used a script while performing. Costumes and props were not necessary. We had to use expression and good body language. This involved facing the audience, not slouching or putting hands in your pockets.

Chelsea

I liked doing Reader's Theatre because I made new friends and you don't need any costumes. Reader's Theatre helps children build fluency in their reading and performing skills. Children make new friends and work with people that they wouldn't usually work with.

Reader's Theatre is where you get a group of people together and act out a play. I enjoyed Reader's Theatre because I really enjoy acting. You require a script and a group of people. Appropriate body language and expression is also used.

Onomatopoeia is a word that sounds like the noise or action it is describing.

Directions to make your own Onomatopoeia Pop Art just like the ones in Area 11:

- Choose a word that is an example of onomatopoeia.
- Write the word in bubble letters in large print. Draw a pattern around the word.
- Colour the word one colour, the pattern another, and the background another colour.
- Trace around the different colours in black.
